Abstract

The question presented: Do consumers using their debt with purchases create and cause inflation that now surrounds all consumers? Interesting topic, lets explore this thought.

Debt

We, most all of us, understand debt is barter useful money received from a lender with promise to repay in future form personal financial assets or money earned.

Debt Causation

Absent excess US Dollars available to Consumers there would be little lending or debiting Consumers: it follows, excess money by some allow the debit to be created by Consumers.

Where does all the US Dollars come from[2] that permit debt to even exist? lets take a look at US Federal Government contributing and promoting Consumer's debt.[1]

Who's to Blame

Maybe it is just a simple answer: The blame lies directly with the US` Government creating US Dollars that don't exist.
